Gen. C. P. Cabell... Give
the Soviets the facts.

FACTS FOR RED YOUTH ADVOCATED BY CABELL

The Communists have failed to capture the imagination of their young people, Gen. C. P. Cabell, Dallas-born deputy director of the Central Intelligence Agency, declared Thursday.

"They admit they are still faced with the task of creating the new Soviet man," he told a luncheon sponsored by the Dallas Council of World Affairs, the Press Club of Dallas, the Dallas Chamber of Commerce, the Dallas Citizens Council and U.S. Air Force Reserve units.

"Since Khrushchev's visit to the United States, there have been wider contacts between Westerners and Soviet citizens. They are extremely anxious to know more about our way of life."

He said that despite their Communist up-bringing, many young people hold non-Communist ideas about truth, justice, government efficiency and personal happiness.

"Our contacts are extremely limited and the Soviet authorities still try to intimidate their people, but one cannot help but wonder how much of an iceberg of dissatisfaction really lies beneath the surface."

The much-decorated Air Force general urged Americans to rely on the facts in our dealings with the Soviets, especially the younger people.

"This is our main hope for destroying their wrong impression of us as war-mongers or soft capitalists devoted only to the material comforts."

While he pointed out this problem and others facing Communist leaders, he emphasized that "I am not predicting that these problems are presently serious enough to lead us to expect the Communist regimes to collapse soon under their own weight."

He said that Russia's industrial progress is real.

"Their slogan is to beat America. This slogan is painted on cowbarns in the Soviet Union. It is the constant refrain of Soviet politicians in public and in private."

He doesn't look for the Soviets to start a war with the U.S.
